

Millikin University
Student Learning in the Political Science Major

By David Jervis, Keiko Ono, and Mark Wrighton

Executive Summary

The Department of Political Science supports the mission of the University in preparing students for professional success, democratic citizenship in a global environment, and a personal life of meaning and value. The mission of the department is to produce graduates who achieve the following seven learning outcome goals:

1. Identify key questions, fundamental concepts, and theoretical frameworks critical to an understanding of the political world;
2. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to American politics;
3. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to comparative politics;
4. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to the area of international relations;
5. Solve complex problems by demonstrating a mastery of substantive knowledge in the discipline's main subfields;
6. Follow scientific and humanistic methods to design and carry out politically-oriented research projects by utilizing sufficiently advanced social research methods;
7. Communicate effectively political knowledge to general audiences as well as colleagues in the field.

The major's core curriculum introduces students to each of the main subfields of political science at both the introductory and advanced levels, grounding them in the basic conceptual and theoretical frameworks of the discipline. Majors also receive training and acquire functional competency in elementary descriptive and inferential statistics. The program requires students to unite theory and practice through a politically-oriented internship. Finally, the major curriculum culminates in a senior thesis project and presentation, designed to integrate students' specific learning in a subfield (or across subfields) with advanced political science research practices.

In addition to regular assessment in the classroom, we assess student learning at three specific points in students' academic careers: First, through pre and post tests in introductory courses, second through measuring the breadth of majors' knowledge in the junior year, and third through a senior research project.

Learning Goals

The Department of Political Science supports Millikin University's three prepares of professional success, democratic citizenship in a global environment, and a personal life of meaning and value. The mission of the department is to produce graduates who can:

1. Identify key questions, fundamental concepts, and theoretical frameworks critical to an understanding of the political world;
2. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to American politics;
3. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to comparative politics;
4. Identify the fundamental concepts, characteristics, and theories central to the area of international relations;
5. Solve complex problems by demonstrating a mastery of substantive knowledge in the discipline's main subfields;
6. Follow scientific and humanistic methods to design and carry out politically-oriented research projects by utilizing sufficiently advanced social research methods;
7. Communicate effectively political knowledge to general audiences as well as colleagues in the field.

The successful graduate of the Department of Political Science is one who has a broad understanding of the institutions and processes of government – at both the domestic and international levels – and the manners by which citizens participate in the policy process. The successful graduate of our department also has a broad understanding of the methods by which we examine political processes and an ability to design, carry out, and communicate the findings of original research.

Snapshot

The faculty of the Department of Political Science consists of three full-time faculty members – each of whom possesses professional experience relevant to the discipline. The faculty covers the discipline's major subfields: international relations, comparative politics, and American politics. While most classes are taught by the department's tenured and tenure-track faculty, one adjunct faculty member, with extensive – and relevant – career experience also contributes to the department's course offerings. Additionally, a faculty member from Philosophy makes regular contributions to the department's offerings in political philosophy and law. All of the department's faculty members contribute courses through the university's US and Global Studies requirements (IN 250 and IN 350).

In the past year, the department adopted a new core curriculum. Political science majors complete 23 credits of a common core (including a required internship experience and senior thesis defended before the department's faculty) plus elective hours, for a total of 41 credit hours. The department also adopted an initial assessment plan for the major.

This report reflects the beginnings of the department's assessment efforts. Those efforts will be expanded over time as components of the major's new curriculum are offered. Additionally, the department sought and was successful in establishing an affiliation between Millikin University and The Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. This new relationship significantly broadens the number of potential internship experiences for the department's majors.

The department had 42 majors this past year and graduated 13. They generally go on to a variety of vocations and experiences. A significant percentage has an interest in law, and department faculty members sit on the university's Pre-Law Committee. Other students have continued their education in graduate programs, including those in political science, public administration, and international relations. Still others have gone on to become practitioners of the political arts in a variety of public service positions. Thus, the department's curriculum provides the foundation for a variety of politically-relevant careers.

The Learning Story

experience (PO 371) and professional development course (PO 410), adding practical political and vocational knowledge to the resources with which they can complete their major requirements.

The political science curriculum requires majors to integrate basic and enhanced knowledge of political phenomena, research skills, and the practical experiences gained over the course of the previous three years into a senior thesis project (PO 450). Majors work with faculty members to develop research proposals which they then execute in difficulty of the subject matter, etc. (Learning Goals 5 and 6). Each student then makes a formal presentation of their senior thesis to political science majors and faculty members, and we assess the quality of the oral presentation by employing the rubric for the Oral Presentation (see Appendix III) (Learning Goal 7)

Assessment Data

In the department of political science, assessment of goals 1 – 4 involves the administration of pre and post tests in introductory classes (See Appendix II for samples) to gauge student learning over the course of the semester. The department proceeded with initial efforts at collecting assessment data in the spring term of 2008. That process involved 11 students in one section of the introductory American politics course; the department expects to expand its data collection efforts significantly in the next academic year. The instructor of the introductory American politics class administered pre and post tests to students from which the data presented below are derived.

Answering 85 to 100 percent of the instrument's questions correctly qualifies a student for a rating of "excellent"; 64 to 84 percent correct a rating of "adequate;" and below 63 percent correct a rating of "nominal." The department employed the following assessment criteria to evaluate student progress in achieving learning goals:

“Green light” (an acceptable level or clearly heading in the right direction and not requiring any immediate change in course of action): 80% or more of the students ranked “adequate” or “excellent”;

“Yellow light” (not an acceptable level; either imprm .T1 0 0 141a(g)10chang[(c24t)-10(rm .T1 0 0 141

Analysis of Assessment Results

As can be seen in the table, a significant portion of students improved their performance on the instrument measuring student learning in the spring 2008 American politics course. Every student scored higher on the post test, and improvement ranged from 1 to 8 correct answers. Indeed, a few students demonstrated striking improvement by doubling – and in one case, tripling – the number of correct answers.

While this is an encouraging start for assessment of student learning in the department of political science, the current data cannot provide a basis on which to discern a trend in the quality of student learning. One section's results do not a trend make. As the department continues the process of collecting data over the next year or two, a trend will likely emerge. Additionally, the small number of students sampled
