

therefore they struggle when they are pushed to attain standards appropriate to the field. When the course is taught again in Spring 2010, several changes will be made. First, the course will be reorganized to focus on the ultimate outcome, the research proposal. Therefore, instead of an academic, somewhat theoretical, review of research methodology, the course will be more applied in focus. Second, models of acceptable research proposals will be